With more people working, exercising and entertaining at home, finding space is a challenge. Phil Rosborough, president of Rosborough Partners, believes outdoor areas solve the dilemma. "Finding attractive solutions that integrate into the flow of the home, such as accessing outdoor space through shared living areas, while taking advantage of desired views or blocking unwanted views, and coordinating with the home's structure and style, will provide the homeowner with the best return on investment," he says. His firm responds to special requests with aplomb. "With many clients along Lake Michigan, traversing the space from bluff to beach is a unique challenge. In addition to serpentine stairways, we have installed funiculars to make the trip easier," says Rosborough. With creativity, sport courts and work studios connect visually with the landscape—like all the diverse environments the company designs and stewards.

MAKE HOME A RESORT

With people spending more time at home, they are looking to recreate the places they normally frequent. Consider setting up a self-contained, fully functional property that includes all your favorite getaway activities. Here's how to do it, according to Rosborough:

- Deluxe outdoor kitchens and dining areas. Create a permanent staycation and functional on-site offices will elevate your home to full resort style living.
- In addition, custom touches such as truly comfortable furniture, seasonal plant pots and unique garden art will personalize gardens and outdoor spaces, taking them up a notch.
- Adding contemplation spaces like a fire pit or even a bird sanctuary to escape to when the stresses of the day need to be shed completes the picture.

Top: Whether it's coffee in the morning or wine at night, spend some time alone in this intimate setting for two.

For Left: The pool, with custom stone tiles and a very private spa overlooking the lake, takes this property to resort living level. A funicular was installed to facilitate travel to and from the beach with fun water toys. Left: Those right doesn't get better than when the outdoors on comfortable furniture with a bowl of popcorn and good friends.
