Looking Out For Our Feathered Friends

All those April showers are finally producing May flowers. The snow has turned to rain, and spring weather seems to be on its way. As the temperature rises it usually marks the time to start up water features. This year, however, the U.S. Department of Agriculture has found cases of the Avian Bird Flu in the United States, including in Illinois. As a result, they are recommending to delay starting up water features until after the migration process is complete, around late-May.

Our team will exercise caution to balance our clients' needs and environmental concerns. Please let us know if you have any questions or requests regarding a water feature start up.

As you seek to protect the health of your garden's feathered visitors, you can find more information here.
