Autumn Landscape

This fall has given us some lovely vignettes as we decorate for the harvest season and all the spooky-themed celebrations. As with every season, dressing your home for fall creates a great ambiance to come home to.

Plant Health Care Awareness

We would like to call attention to a condition we're observing on some client sites where some Arborvitae foliage is turning brown. Please know there is no reason to be concerned about disease or insects causing this discoloration.

The browning of inner foliage is usually due to seasonal needle drop, where evergreens

(arborvitae, spruce, pine, fir, juniper, etc.) shed their oldest, or innermost, needles in autumn. Those needles gradually turn yellow or brown and drop to the ground.

Environmental stress such as drought can cause greater than normal loss of needles. Important to note that the needles on the outer growth remain green on healthy evergreens.
