Winter And Your Spring Garden

The Chicago area received a nice covering of snow this weekend, but overall the Midwest has been experiencing a mild winter so far. This warmer than normal weather, without the usual damaging ice and drying winds, can help plant performance come spring. However, while we appreciate the lack of slippery roads and icy walkways, winter's typically frigid temperatures help to kill off pests that overwinter in organic matter. Knowing what to look for means being prepared to head-off any damage these pests might bring.

RP's full garden stewardship approach to landscaping means we are proactive in protecting the health of your plants. When spring arrives and periodic services resume, our team will be inspecting client sites for signs of pests and will provide protective solutions at the first indication of their presence.
